RANGE REVENGE

IN his office, Sheriff Ned Farson of Deadrock, Arizona looked up suddenly as Ben Sanders, Deadrock County's medical officer came in.

Ben, who made the rounds of the county villages once a month, nodded.

"How's killin's, Ben?" Farson asked, chuckling.

The small, squat figure of the doctor sat itself down in a chair, knocked the ten-gallon lid to the back of its head and smiled.

"Doin' right well, Ned," Sanders said. "Two murders over in Dogville, an attempted killin' in Three Buttes and a suicide in Indian Head. Guess the suicide don't count, but I still get twenty bucks a head for doin' a coroner's job on any death that looks suspicious."

"We might have one for you here soon," Farson said, getting up and lighting a quirly. He built one for the doc.

"Thought you were a good Sheriff, son," Sanders said lighting it and puffing contentedly. "A good Sheriff keeps murders from happening, particularly if he knows they're in the cards."

Farson laughed harshly.

"Even my own?" he asked.

Sander's small eyes opened wide.

"You expectin' to get shot at?" he asked.

Farson nodded.

"Not in the usual line of business," he said. "You remember that bank robbery we had here last month?"

Sanders nodded.

Farson looked him squarely in the eye.

"I know who did it. The point is I can't prove it, but I figure that by scaring the hombre who stole that twenty thousand bucks out of the vault, he'll give it back."

"Who is it, Ned?" Sanders asked.

The Sheriff shook his head.

"I'm not tellin', Doc," he said. "To begin with, I might be wrong, and I don't want any innocent man's head on my conscience if I am. I figured a letter telling him I know all about the job might do the trick. I mailed it out last night. If it works, he'll find some way of getting that dough back to the bank. If it doesn't . . ."

"You'll wind up on my twenty-dollar list," Sanders said.

"There is one thing you can do for me, Ben," the Sheriff said. He wrote five names on a slip of paper, handed it to Sanders. "You know all these men. They're prominent in the county — and they live here round Deadrock. One of 'em did the bank job. I'm not sayin' who, but if I am killed, maybe you can ferret out which one did it. If you find your murderer, you'll find a bank robber, too."

"I know 'em all," Sanders said, glancing over the list. Then he looked up at the Sheriff. "Maybe you ought to hole up here for a couple of days anyway. I'm in town for three days, and between the two of us . . ."

Ned Farson shook his head.

"That bank robbery's not my only concern, Ben. I'm county Sheriff. And right now, I'm ridin' over to Snakesprings on a case. In the meantime, you can save yourself hotel fare by holing up here yourself. I ought to be back by ten o'clock in the morning. If I'm not, take a good long look at that slip of paper."

Buckling on his hoglegs, Farson tossed the key of the office to Sanders.

"Be seein' you, Ben," he said, and left.

By ten the following morning, the Sheriff hadn't returned. Then Sanders phoned the deputy's office in Snakesprings. He was told that Sheriff Farson had started back from Snakesprings at seven in the morning.

Sanders hung up and stroked his chin. That meant that Ned Farson had had plenty of time to get back to Deadrock, unless, of course . . .

He got out the slip of paper with the five names on it and made five phone calls to surrounding ranches, naming the Deadrock Saloon as a meeting place at noon.

Then he buckled on his own hog-legs and headed up the street toward the saloon. It wasn't long before all five had showed up.

Sanders took them into the back room, brought in the bartender.

"First of all, Sam," he said to the bartender, "I'm appointin' you Sheriff's deputy. I'm the only law officer in town now, and I've got the authority. Sheriff Farson's vanished between here and Snakesprings and . . ." He glanced round the semi-circle of faces. ". . . at the very least, I smell foul play."

He interviewed the men one by one and in front of each other, as Sam Bolton closed up the saloon and stood guard over the back room.

They all talked: Joe Hunker, insurance man, Guy Ransom,

Skinny Girls Don't Have OOMPH!

It takes those extra lbs. of solid flesh to "bring out" your natural curves

If you're otherwise healthy but skinny, scrawny, rundown and lbs. underweight, try correcting this common mistake in eating.

THERE are three essential substances that many thin, scrawny and undernourished girls may fail to get in sufficient quantity from the food they eat. These substances are Vitamin B₁, calcium phosphate and iron. If, like thousands of others, you are underweight without organic cause . . . never seem to gain a pound . . . are so thin that you look gangling and gawky from insufficient amounts of these precious elements, don't get discouraged.

You may find that by correcting this simple mistake in eating you can easily add firm solid flesh . . . extra alluring pounds that help bring out those natural eye-catching curves. A simple and easy way is to try the amazing new product called Numal that supplies, in significant amounts, the Vitamin B₁, calcium phosphate and iron needed in the daily diet. Plus a food that in itself is a great help in adding extra pounds.

Take 1 heaping teaspoonful of Numal 3 times a day. It is pleasant, assimilable

If loss of weight persists see your doctor and easy to take. You will get the equivalent in Vitamin B₁ content of 34 cakes of average moist baker's yeast . . . the iron equivalent of 15 pounds of tomatoes or 1 2/3 pounds of spinach or 9 pounds of boiled beets . . . and the calcium equivalent of 4 1/2 pints of fresh cow's milk, the phosphorus content of 1 glass.

Remember, if you don't get a sufficient quantity of Vitamin B₁ in your daily diet, you may suffer loss of appetite. And without sufficient iron, the element that helps build rich red blood, you may be rundown, pale, weak and listless. You need calcium phosphate for sound teeth and sturdy bones.

Numal Must Please You or No Cost

So if you are skinny, gangling and bony from lack of these precious nutrients, don't wait any longer. Get Numal today. You will want those extra pounds that "bring out" your natural eye-catching curves. Take Numal faithfully for a week. See if you can't actually feel the difference . . . gain weight and better color. If after this short period you honestly don't feel Numal has benefited you, just return the bottle for a complete refund of your money. Numal costs but a few cents a day to use.

...CONTINUED

gambler, Rud Kenley, banker, Hank Winnerton, rancher and Rory Hecksher, who owned the local grain and feed station.

After he'd finished, Guy Ramsom spoke up.

"What we'd all like to know, doc," he said. "Is why we're suspected." He glanced out the window. "Deadrock's a small town, but there's more people in it than just us five."

The others nodded in agreement.

Ben Sanders smiled grimly. Then he told them why and watched their faces.

Not one of them showed the slightest sign of disturbance. In fact, all five smiled.

Sanders turned to Sam Bolton.

"Sam, you're deputy, now. Keep this room locked and keep every man in it here until I get back."

"Where you goin', doc?" Hank Winnerton asked.

Ben Sanders looked him straight in the eye.

"To find the body of Ned Farson," he said levelly. "Provided he's dead, of course, and I think he is. I don't reckon Ned stopped off on the road to read a book of poetry."

He waited, while Sam Bolton closed the door behind him and locked it. Then he went back to Ned Farson's office, untied his cayuse and started out of town.

He headed down an arroyo on the other side of Deadrock, paused, too a good long look back at the town and cantered off down a trail.

Half an hour of riding brought him onto the rocky, basalt slopes that led up to the low buttes beyond which the Arizona desert stretched for hundreds of miles.

The sun beat down fiercely as he rode.

Finally he turned off the trail.

It was now or never, he knew. No longer did he have the slightest clue to follow where Ned Farson's horse had probably turned off the road leading from Snakesprings. All he could do was ride in wide circles until he hit something.

Abruptly his cayuse reared.

"Smell something, boy?" he asked.

The horse reared again, whinnying.

Then Ben Sanders saw it. He saw the stream of blood running down between two rocks. And when he'd ridden up to the rocks and cantered round, he saw the bodies—two of them.

Ned Farson and his horse lay dead in pools of blood.

The medical officer dismounted. With a grunt he noticed that the Sheriff's guns hadn't been fired. Obviously, whoever killed him had held him up on the road by surprise, then ridden him back this far in the hills. Sanders slung Farson's dead body over his saddle bow and rode back to town, a hard, grim, flinty look in his eyes. At the Deadrock Saloon he tied up the horse, went in, found Sam Bolton still on guard, the five still there.

"Ned's dead outside," he said. "And I know who killed him."

His finger pointed to Rud Kenley, the banker.

With one convulsive movement Kenley reached for a hogleg. Then Sam Bolton's gun roared. Kenley yipped, the gun falling to the floor.

"You all but confessed that way, Kenley," Sanders said grimly. "But I can prove you killed Ned Farson."

"I—I was home all morning. I told you that!" Kenley quavered.

"And that's just why I knew you were lying and because I knew you were lying, I also knew just about where Ned Farson's body lay." The medical officer said. He twitched a flower in Kenley's button-hole, smiled, looked round. "I reckon we've all seen Rud Kenley put a flower in his buttonhole every day of the year."

"That doesn't prove a thing!" Kenley said, trembling.

"Yes it does," Sanders grated.

"You got a letter from Farson saying he knew you'd robbed your own bank because it had to be an inside job and only you could have done it. You knew where he was going. This morning you rode out to kill him—and you did." Again he touched the flower. "You said you'd been home all morning and all last night. But this flower's fresh. It's an edelweiss, a flower that only grows in high, rocky places. There's only one high, rocky place around here—where I found Ned. I knew I'd find him there because I saw that flower in your buttonhole when you came in and told your lying story. You couldn't be home and in a high, rocky place at the same time, could you, Kenley? Too bad you absently plucked an edelweiss for your buttonhole after killing Ned." He reached into his pocket, produced a flower. "Here's another one, Kenley. I picked it just two feet from where Ned Farson was killed!"
